

HAVE YOU BEEN PART OF A PEACEKEEPING OPERATION?

We want to learn from your experience and your insights

Peacebuilding and Responsive Governance Project

John Braithwaite, Hilary Charlesworth, Kate Macfarlane

The United Nations is putting foreign troops and police into peacekeeping operations more than in the past. So are other organizations like the African Union. What works in peacekeeping? What are the kinds of interventions that create wars and make things worse for the people? How can international peacebuilding and international law contribute to justice and human development after armed conflict? These are the questions we seek to answer in the Peacebuilding and Responsive Governance Project.

We are searching for answers by talking to people that have experienced armed conflict and foreign peacekeeping and peacebuilding. We are not interested in finding out anything of current political or military strategic significance. We are simply interested in learning lessons, the lessons your personal experience can teach the world.

If you are interested in talking to us about your experiences and involvement with a peace operation please contact us with the country or countries that you have had experience in and your role in the peace operation (eg. military, police, humanitarian, diplomatic)

John Braithwaite
Centre for International Governance and Justice (CIGJ)
Australian National University
E: John.Braithwaite@anu.edu.au
T: +61 (0)2 6125 3005

This project is supported with funding from the Australian Research Council (ARC) and is being undertaken in the Centre for International Governance and Justice (CIGJ) in RegNet, RISS at the Australian National University. Further information about the Centre and its projects can be found at <http://cigj.anu.edu.au>